- » Interviews with international scientists working in Germany

»I believe that today, as in the past, German research remains world class. Germany is the hub of research in Europe, both in terms of its quality and its central geographical location.«

Jonathan West (UK) is a postdoctoral researcher and has been living in Dortmund for the past 18 months.

»I find that Germany offers excellent opportunities for personal and scientific development. People here appreciate what others are doing.«

Dr. phil. Ravindra V. Jategaonkar (India) is a senior scientist at the German Aerospace Centre (DLR).

»Students in Germany have a thorough knowledge of their subjects and practical experience. Working with them always gives me new ideas.«

Dr. Heather Evans (USA) is working at the Max-Planck-Institute for Dynamics and Self-organisation in Göttingen.

»Germany offers excellent opportunities for research. There are so many universities with long-established traditions and also large, independent research organisations.«

Magali Solé (France) is a post-doc in the Department of Environmental Microbiology at the Helmholtz Centre for Environmental Research. She came to Germany nine years ago.
